WIDOWS' PENSIONS AN AID TO 15,000; REUNITE FAMILIES

600 Children Taken From Public Institutions and Restored to Mothers.

By Sophie Irene Loeb.

Fifteen thousand individuals are now being cared for under the Widows' Pension Law, according to the report of the Child Welfare Board at a monthly meeting in City Hall yesterday.

Various suggestions were entertained in an effort to increase the efficiency of the staff for the purpose of investigating some 4,000 cases that have accumulated before a full staff had been operating.

The question of creating "super-visors" was laid over until the next meeting, during which time the report of a sub-committee will be made. The board voted to offer its services to the Mayor and Governor in the war crisis, and a committee is to be appointed to devise ways and means. Several members believed it would be feasible to take over the families of soldiers, since the machinery of caring for families is already in motion, and it would require little investigation to determine the needs of families whose bread-winners are away in war service.

The consensus of opinion was that these cases should not be deemed objects of charity and such relief should come from a public governmental body such as the Child Welfare Board represents. Public money for such families might be transmitted through the board, for example. Every effort is being put forth to examine the needy cases as speedily as possible.

A net gain of about 300 cases is being made every month, the board finds. It was estimated that there would be a net gain of about 600 cases per month.

The board found that the average allowance per family is rising steadily and reached $28.38 in March. The average allowance per child has increased to $4.70 a month. The board has now under its immediate care 8,277 children under sixteen years of age, and if the mothers and wage-earning children were added to this it would reach a figure of 15,000 individuals in the community who are directly benefited through the allowances granted by the board.

The board has taken over 600 children out of child-caring institutions and returned them to their mothers. The great need of taking children out of institutions as quickly as possible is strongly evident. The Families Committee makes the following significant statement in this connection: "The mothers and children in many cases seem to have grown entirely apart, and it is only the monetary consideration that causes the widow to ask for the discharge of the children. In many cases the children are unmanageable, have persistently remained away from school, and in several cases have requested that they be returned to the institution. "It has been necessary to return the children of five widows back to the institutions from which they were taken. This is a very small percentage when you consider that 200 widows have taken one or more children out of institutions. In other words, it has only been one allowance in forty of the institutional cases that has not proven reasonably satisfactory. "When one sees the effects of institutional life both upon the child and parent it confirms the contention that the prevention of more children of widows being committed to institutions is by all means the most important function of the Board of Child Welfare."

The request for additional investigators was referred to the Bureau of Standards, who promise a report in the near future.

Our London affiliations picked them out and they are in the full sense of the word Picked Patterns. There are 120 distinct examples and only three that London and we don't agree on. We have never before seen a collection of Foulards in which the colorings and designs were so uniformly attractive. They are an education in originality of pattern and as festive in coloring as confetti at a fair. Hand-made, of course, and taped clear through from stem to stern, that they may keep their shape in spite of Entangling Alliances.

$1.00 for the Four-in-Hands and 75c for the Bat Wings. And a dozen of either is none too many for the man who knows the value of variety in keeping up appearances.
